Dear Mr. Tuverson:

Thanks for your kind note. At the moment, despite the need of a private publisher for promotion, I hope nothing will take me to Boston in the immediate future so I can complete the three books upon which I am now engaged. The New Orleans book has grown to over 100,000 words, but I am close to finishing it. Then I am going back to a Manchester book and then to WHITEWASH III. However, I certainly will let you know if I can go to Boston, especially if you want me or if I will be near there.

In the meanwhile, as soon as I finish reading the New Orleans book and send it to my agent (I now have one), should it interest you, I think we can do something exciting entirely by phone and live and with phone-ins. I do it often.

Again thanks.

Sincerely yours,

Harold Weisberg
